Soccess in this world commonly passes for mer- feed the fires of a steamboat furnace." it. It is indeed prime facil evidence of merit : for the last fifty years; and our school-books gen- pulse to right the wrong which has been done. erally impress this idea upon the minds of the

The following statement, from Prof. Olmsted's "Natural Philosophy," will serve as an example of the prevailing notions on this subject :- "Although the idea of propelling boats by the force of steam, was entertained by different individuals, in different countries, long before it was carried into practice, get the first successful effort at steam payigation was made by our countryman, Robert Fulton, in the year 1807. This year the first steam. boat, the Clermont, seconded the river Hadson to Albany."

Of late years, a new claimant for the honor of the invention, has appeared in the person of a Spanlard, of the sixteenth century. Prof. Silliman, Jr. in his work on "Natural Philosophy," just published, says :- "Blasco de Garay, a sea-captain of Barcelona, in Spain, in 1543, moved a vessel of two hundred tone, three miles an hour by paddles, propelled probably by steam, as the moving force came, it was said, from a boiler containing water, and liable to burst". This was more than one hundred and fifty years before the steam-engine itself was recognized as a practical invention in its rudest forms. This story is by many regarded as fabulous, or at least as having received large additions, and is somewhat successfully called in question in an article published in the Scientific American, of Nov. 20th, 1868. The writer, John MacGregor, of Leadon, saye :- "Some months ago, I isapected two letters, written A. D. 1543. by Blanco de Garay, and now proserved in the National Archives, at Simancas, in Spain. There gave the particulars of experiments at Malaga and Sarcelona, with large vessels propelled by paddles which were turned by forty men. By many authors, and for a long time, it has been positively affirmed this Blanco de Garay used a steam engine for maritime propulsion; but after careful and minute inrestigations, at Simaneas, Madrid and Barcelona, I easure find one particle of reliable swidence for this assertion."

Wastcott's "Life of John Fitch," recently published at Philadelphia, throws new light upon the general question. From this work it appears that the first boat propelled by steam in this country. and probably is the world, was a small skill, constrauted by John Fitch, at Philadelphia, in July, 1786. He experimented upon the various forms of propulsion, the screw, andless-chain, side-Theels, &c., and finally attained a speed of seven miles an hour, with this steam skiff. The next year, August, 1787, Fitch tried his second steam. boat on the Delaware, in the presence of many members of the Convention to frame the Federal Constitution, and received certificates of his success from Gov. Randalph, of Virginia, David Rittonbouse, and many others. This boat was forty-five feet in length, with an engine of twelve inch cyl-

- About this time a eleambout company was organized at Philadelphia, for which Fitch constructed his third stramer-s boat about sixty feet long and eight feet beam. This boat made a trip in July, 1788, from Philadelphia to Burlington, a distance of twenty miles. In October, of the same year, it made the trip to Burlington in three

THE PATTER OF LITTLE PEET.

Up with the sun in the morning, Away to the garden be bies, To see if the sleepy blossoms Have began to open their eyes. Running a race with the wind, With a step as light and floot, Under my window I bear The patter of little feet,

Now to the brook he wanders In swift and poiseless flight, Splanking the sparkling ripples Like a fairy water-sprite. No sand under fabled river Has gleame like his golden hair, No pearly sea-shell is fairer Then his slender ankles have ; Nor the rosiest stem of coral That blushes in ocean's bed, Is sweet as the flush that follows Our darling's fairy tread.

From a broad window my neighbor Looks down on our little cot, And watches the "poor man's blessing"-I cannot envy his lot. He has pictures, books, and music, Bright fountains and noble trees, Flowers that blossom in roses, Birds from beyond the seas; But never does children's laughter His homeward footsteps greet, His stately halls ne'er echo To the tread of innocent feet.

This child is our "speaking picture," A birdling that chatters and sings, Sometimes a sleeping cherub-(Our other one has winge;) His heart is a charmed casket. Full of all that's cunning and sweet, And no harp-strings hold such music As follows his twinkling feet,

When the glory of sunset opens And the highway by angels trod, And seems to unbar the city Whose Builder and Maker is God, Close to the crystal portal, I see by the gates of posrl, The eyes of our other angel A twin-born little girl. And I asked to be taught, and directed Morgac O'Sullivan, au Irishman, and a celebrated Parliamentary reporter, attached to the And much may be gained by relying London Morning Chronicle some fifty years ago. was as remarkable for his humor as his profescional ability. Whenever any one offended Morgan, or got out of favor with him, he invariably retaliated in the way of some practical joke, that generally placed his antagonist in a very ridiculous position and afforded the humorist satisfaction. In this way he once "got even" with two individuals at the same time, who had excited his ire-namely, the celebrated Wilberforce, then a leading member of the opposition in Parliament, and one Jack Finnerty, a Parliamentary reporter of the Morning Herald. Finnerty was fresh from Tipperary, and quite unacquainted with the characteristics of the different members of Parliament, but he received a good deal of generous profestional assistance at the outset of his career from Morgan O'Sullivan. On the occasion now referred to, Finnerty came into the reporter's gallery. at a period of night when the debates seemed to of the benches, and requested his friend to wake out of your eyes. him up if snything lively came before the House, and thereupon went off to sleep. ## WAY.

BY BLIZA COOK.

From them, as it may from "a well." "Yes, it was, I could not alsop for thinking of Let us question the thinkers and doers, And hear what they honestly say, And you'll find they believe, like bold wooers, In, "Where there's a will there's a way."

"I do feel burt with you, but I don't want to call The hills have been high for man's mounting, The stars have been thick for his counting, The sands have been wide for his tracks, The poles have been broad for his sway, That "Where there's a will there's a way."

Does suffering weigh down your might? Only call up a spirit to hope with, And dawn may come out of the night Oh! much may be done by defying The ghosts of Despair and Dismay, On "Whore there's a will there's a way."

Should ye see afar off that worth winning, Set out on the journey with trust; And ne'er beed if your path at beginning Should be smoog brambles and dust; Though it is but by footsteps ye do it, And hardshipe may hinder and stay, Keep a heart, and be sure you'll get through it, For "Where there's a will there's a way."
